Along one side of the space was a railroad track upon which were logging cars, some loaded and some in process of loading. A regular logging locomotive was attached to the train. The whole was a reproduction in all its details and on a full scale of a genuine Michigan lumber camp. It attracted much attention and interesting comment. The mineral exhibit led all others in copper and iron and received more awards than that of any other state. The general plan and execution of the display was the work of Peter White of Marquette, a member of the board. Jay A. Hubbell of Houghton, who as a member of the centennial board prepared the mineral exhibit at Philadelphia in 1876, interested himself in making the copper exhibit a worthy one. The details of the exhibit however, were due to Samuel P. Brady, a mining engineer of Detroit, who gave his time for several months to its collection and arrangement. The space occupied in the mines building was fifty by sixty feet on the cross center aisle. Decorating the main entrance was a handsome carved stone arch, having a frontage of fourteen feet and rising to a height of twenty-five feet above the main floor. The portal of the arch was seven feet in width. On passing through one found himself beneath a semi-dome, handsomely decorated and having an ornamental frieze....
