Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from White Pine, Vol. 8: Series of Architectural Monographs There are such a variety of details to be understood. Take, for example, the clapboards; their width or exposure to the weather is of vital importance, their edges may be rounded by many coats of paint, or possibly they may have little half round beading at the drip edge. What is their relation to the cornice boards, door and window frames? How do they meet the underside of the cornice and finish at the base? Are they surrounded by a plain or molded surface? What about the width of these clapboards? It is the finesse thus displayed by the early builder took on a more studied and classical character, recalling in a thoroughly adequate manner the most perfect Georgian and Adam detail. As the early craftsmen designed they had always the actual structure in mind, a light here and a shadow there, the suitability of the detail they adapted, and they were not fooled as many of our modern designers have been by the sparkle achieved by lines crossed at the ends, inevitable axis lines and facile swerves of the pencil on paper. Modern American architecture has often been cursed because of clever draughtsmen who The Hinsdale House. North Bennington, Vermont. Another example of the use of the adapted Palladian window. that causes us to exclaim as we approach and study his work. It is these things that combine to make his achievement pleasing. As time went on the early builder developed more studied and elaborate detail; this, added to his already beautiful use of plain surfaces, served to enhance the proportion of his doors, windows, and...
