Not illustrated. 1912 Excerpt: . year, so that for future comparisons the total of congenital debility and ill defined and unknown causes should be combined. The distribution, by days, weeks, and months, of deaths occurring before the completion of the first 2 years of life, as given in Table 10, may be continued in future bulletins for individual states and for the registration cities of 250,000 population and over. Such data would be more valuable if it were possible to reduce the figures to a comparative basis by showing the ratios of deaths to births in each area. This, however, is impossible at present because of the imperfect registration of births. TYPHOID FEVEB. The total number of deaths from typhoid fever returned for the registration area for the year 1910 was 12,673, equivalent to a death rate of 23.5 per 100,000 estimated midyear population. This number represents an increase of 1,951 over that returned for the preceding year, when the death rate was only 21.1 per 100,000. With the exception of the rate for 1909, however, the rate for 1910 is the lowest recorded since the beginning of the series of annual reports in 1900, despite the fact that for the year 1910 the returns include the deaths in three new registration states--Minnesota, Montana, and Utah--and also in North Carolina municipalities of 1,000 population and over in 1900, in all of which areas the typhoid rates were considerably above the average. Deaths and death rates from typhoid fever are shown...
