Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: . . . and growth of the Civil Engineers Club of Cleveland, Ohio, of which body he was twice elected to hold the responsible and honorable position of President in the years of 1887 and 1888. His courteous, firm, but unassuming, manner, his sterling integrity and keen sense of justice, caused him to be held in universal respect and esteem by the large number of his subordinates as well as by the citizens of Cleveland. His professional advice was often sought, both at home and abroad. To the younger members of the profession he was especially kind, always giving them the benefit of his experience, together with encouraging words and hopeful advice. As an engineer these are the monuments of John Whitelaw. As a man, the confidence of the great public, never withdrawn, never unshaken through such a long public career, is a glorious epitaph. Mr. Whitelaw was elected...
