All students now need a strong foundation of skills and knowledge to excel in life after high school. The testimony that todays witnesses will provide makes the important point that the modern workplace is very different than it was when Americas high schools were first designed. In many cases even the most basic job applications must be completed on computers--good thing I am not applying--requiring almost every person to have at least a basic understanding of technology. Technology is only one piece of the pie. A student graduating from high school must have a broad skill set of reading, analytical skills, communication and technology in order to succeed postgraduation. I am sure that every person in this room has heard me say more than once that I am an advocate on behalf of No Child Left Behind. It is the right thing to do, and the law is making significant headway in closing the achievement gap, particularly in elementary schools when all children should be learning basic skills like reading and math. I commend the President, the States, the National Governors Association, local school districts and both nonprofit and for- profit organizations for recognizing we need to address our Nations high schools. I am not yet sure there is Federal role or what that role should be, but I remain committed to learning more and doing whatever I can to make high schools part of the education reform dialog. The private sector is uniquely qualified to help address the challenges of high school reform, because businesses recognize the importance of a strong secondary education in preparing...
